Get rid of your mouse! ENTER PUTS KEYSTROKE INSTEAD OF DOING WHATEVER YOU PUT YOUR MOUSE IN TO. KEYMACRO contains a keyboard macro manager. You can program keyboard shortcuts (including keyboard shortcuts to launch programs and to use Windows built-in applications) to make your life easier. For instance, you can assign a shortcut to open a document. Then, you can type whatever you would have typed in a text file, or even the document title (if it's your custom document title), and the application will open and the file will be opened. Or, you can write a single character that will activate a built-in application, like a calculator, or a web browser. KeyMacro is very convenient, especially if you use a keyboard only for your work. Before you begin KEYMACRO will record all your actions in a profile named "Profile_name". If you launch KeyMacro without a profile name, it will create a new profile. That is, your keyboard and mouse shortcuts and actions will not be stored in a profile name. Features Profile name generator Profiles name generator allows you to create a profile name for yourself. You can choose from many names, for instance, the application name, the file name, or a short description of the action you're performing. The name can be only numbers and characters. Single-action shortcuts For your convenience, you can configure shortcuts to single actions, such as "open this document", "launch that app", or "copy a value". You can create profile shortcuts, single-action shortcuts, or macros. You can add keyboard shortcuts to launch applications, which can be very useful. For instance, you can type "calculator" and it opens a calculator. Keyboard shortcut to open a document. Keyboard shortcut to open a new blank document. Keyboard shortcut to activate a browser. KP Timer will set a timer, and also act as a real-time clock that can be synced with internet time, and the time set in the config file. This makes it possible to set a desired time in your config file, and in order to set it to go off at any given time, or set it to go off at a time based on a time zone. This makes it ideal for use as a desktop alarm clock, that syncs with your computer's clock. The config file is completely editable so you can set a time for it to go off, and if you need to change it later, all you have to do is make the changes to the config file. 3. As you can see, the P2P clients are marked for immediate download. The site itself is pretty organized as well, with categories for different games, and subcategories for different games. However, some of the links are pointing to other sites. 4. For example, go to the GTA IV section, and you can download some different files. 5. Keep in mind that the site only provides files, so you'll have to make sure that the files are compatible with your platform. If you have P2P installed, though, it's definitely worth checking out. Heat shock protein 90 protects endothelial cells against postischemic apoptosis: evidence from a hypoxia model. Endothelial cells play a crucial role in the pathogenesis of ischemia-reperfusion (IR) injury. Heat shock protein 90 (Hsp90) is an endoplasmic reticulum protein that is induced by cellular stress. This study was designed to determine whether Hsp90 is involved in protection against apoptosis in endothelial cells after IR. By using mouse aortic endothelial cells (MAECs), which express Hsp90 constitutively and do not express the Hsp70 isoform, our results indicated that under normoxic conditions, MAECs were resistant to apoptosis induced by IR injury, as assessed by propidium iodide and annexin V-fluorescein isothiocyanate staining. In contrast, IR induced apoptosis in human umbilical vein endothelial cells (HUVECs). Furthermore, administration of an antisense oligodeoxynucleotide targeted against Hsp90 to MAECs induced apoptosis in normal culture conditions but protected against IR injury.
